"Fahrenheit 451" is a dystopian novel in which the setting takes place in a future society. Books are banned in this society and any sort of thinking is controlled by the use of advanced technology by the government. Some of the novel's main themes include technology, propaganda, and censorship. The main character, also known as the protagonist, is a fireman named "Guy Montag" whose job is to burn any discovered books. Guy Montag's wife, Mildred, shows a lot of these themes affecting her in the novel.

I thought the book was fascinating to read. However, the most important thing must be the messages the book sends to its readers about the dangers of technology and censorship. I felt the plot would be very stale or fast-paced at times, especially near the end of the novel and just wouldn't capture my interest as well as it did at the beginning or middle. In addition, I felt that the characters lacked emotion and had a hard time connecting with its readers.

I would definitely recommend this book to everyone because of the warnings and messages it contains. If you like sci-fi, then this should be at the top of your "to-read" list. "Fahrenheit 451" reminds me of the novel "1984" by George Orwell because of its similar focus on technology and censorship. Both novels use advanced technology to show censorship by the government. Overall, the novel "Fahrenheit 451" gives you something to think about and is overall, a great and exciting read!
